

Stryker Secures US Supply Contract

Stryker Communications announces it has won a significant contract in the United States to supply its IRIS wireless redeployable camera systems to the Department of Homeland Security.

The contract initially covers the provision of a number of Stryker's IRIS systems for evaluation in the field, following which it is expected that further units will be called-off.

The flexibility afforded by Stryker's range of optional interchangeable PODs to provide extended intelligence and onboard recording capabilities was a key factor in IRIS being selected by this high-profile organisation.
